

Notes on Becoming a Comrade: Indigenous Women, Leadership, and Movement(s) for Decolonization [Abstract]

Jaskiran Dhillon

Written from the perspective of a non-Indigenous woman of color “standing with” Indigenous communities through politicized allyship, this article explores the politics of becoming a comrade to Indigenous peoples in their struggles for liberation in the settler-colonial present. Dhillon highlights key moments in the development of her political consciousness by centering the fundamental leadership, knowledge, and guidance of Indigenous women in decolonial activism and scholarship across a range of areas—including environmental justice, colonial gender violence, and the arts—that have been foundational to the anticolonial framework informing her scholarship and organizing.

To purchase the full article:

<https://uclajournals.org/doi/abs/10.17953/aicrj.43.3.dhillon>